By M. M. A. McINTOSH.

On her brow as pure and fair,
With eyes like stars in heaven's bower,
Dwells no voluptuous splendor;
But instead of beauty's smile,
There is a look of stern, cold light,

I can see a pallid grave.

That illustrious though I like to call her, —
Whom you quite to me declare,
Gives me no pleasure, no pleasure,
No pleasure, no pleasure, no pleasure;

The heart's resounding strain,

Music to me, no music,

A single ray bright day,

A sound, no sound,

A smile, no smile,

A look, no look,

A tear, no tear,

A sigh, no sigh,

A smile, no smile,

A look, no look,

A tear, no tear,
